Current Situation

December 7, 2017 12:30 p.m.

A wintry mix of rain and snow will impact much of north Georgia this evening and into Friday. The rain or rain/snow mix should begin after midnight tonight through Friday afternoon, with some accumulation possible. Due to the warm ground as well as surface temperatures remaining above freezing, most, if not all of the accumulation will be in grassy areas and on elevated surfaces. This storm system should leave our area by Saturday morning; highest chance of accumulation is after midnight tonight through 2pm Friday.

Chance of Precipitation

Friday High Temperatures

Much colder temperatures will plunge into the area behind this system; residual wet roadways will freeze very quickly. Be prepared for black ice and slippery roads; use caution while driving, especially on bridges and overpasses. Please stay tuned to local weather forecasts for changing weather conditions.

The Office of Emergency Management will continue to monitor this situation and will provide updates when conditions warrant.
