Mike Sullivan: Ism's - Sexism and Racism

- It is important to note that sexism and racism is judged on how someone receives what is said, not how it was meant to be received.
- In a strictly business or professional relationship, it is important to be watchful of using generalizations when speaking .
- If it is not necessary to be said, leave it out.

End of Year Projects

- Each council member is expected to create a presentation to discuss their experiences for the year, and their hopes for coming years. The presentation can be in any format.
- Some topics of discussion for the presentation are:
 - What are you walking away with?
 - What resonated with you?
 - What went well? What did not?
 - What do you think should change?
 - For first-year members, did you get the base you need to succeed for later years on the council?
 - For returning members, take a moment to look back on how past projects were planned and compare them to what we did this year. What went well, and what did not?

At 7:03, Kaan motioned to table all remaining matters and Laura Ann seconded the motion.
